Georgia-based artist, Harvey Meyer strategically turns wood vessels to resemble woven basketry, also known as "basket illusion". Meyer embellishes the surfaces of his turnings by piercing, burning, coloring, carving, and texturing; resulting in a semblance of cleverly executed vessels. Showcase Gallery, May 5 - June 28 - "Forest for the Trees: Peggy Root and Brad Sells". Brad Sells and Peggy Root both create with a thoughtful reverence towards nature. In her latest plein air paintings, Root evokes the specific feelings of a particular place and time by quickly moving around shapes and color. Here, she strives to paint a solid construction that most simply and elegantly captures the significance of a scene. Similarly, sculptor Brad Sells creates with agility and confidence. Sells primarily carves his wood sculptures with a chainsaw, then refines the undulating surface to reveal the final visage of the piece. His newly featured sculptures are made from fallen 3,000 year-old sequoia trees in response to his collaboration with the non-profit organization, GreenWood Global. Ongoing - Featuring works in a variety of mediums by regional, national and international artists.
